We had the opportunity to read a portion of The X-Men series, and notice a common event throughout the stories. Marvel Girl always seems to be the one who gets captured or is in danger and in need of saving. Fellow X-Man Beast also constantly refers to her as “the female member” or “woman,” introducing a slight feminine prejudice in this beloved series. Below is the image of Marvel Girl being captures from issue 10, “The Coming of Ka-Zar!”

We also discovered a strong sense of stereotypical racism in “Daredevil, The Man Without Fear” issue 28, “Thou Shalt Not Covet Thy Neighbor’s Planet,” in which all of the races represented are done so in an extremely stereotypical way. Even the fonts used were chosen to mimic the culture and language of the person speaking.
